

The difference of two intervals can be computed by subtracting the upper bound of the second interval from the first interval's lower bound, and subtracting the lower bound of the second interval from the first interval's upper bound. This ensures that the new interval captures the lowest and highest possible values of the difference.